General Cevallos' Campaign Against Nuevo Leon—General Ochoa Marching on Saltillo—Treviso's Increasing Strength.

MATAMOROS, Mexico, June 1. }
Via BROWNVILLE, Texas, June 1, 1872. }

An official report from the revolutionists near Monterey states that General Cevallos is moving from Camargo, with his entire force, against the State of Nuevo Leon, acting in conjunction with General Sanchez Ochoa, who is now marching on Saltillo.

General Treviso is adding to his troops and strengthening the fortifications around Monterey. He says he has 3,000 men under his command and arms and money at his disposal sufficient to resist the government.

THE STRUGGLE FOR THE NORTHERN FRONTIER.

The revolutionary General Naranjo is operating against General Cevallos' communications. A decisive battle between the revolutionists under Pedro Martinez and the government troops under General Ochoa will soon take place before Monterey for the possession of the northern frontier.

The Governor of Chihuahua has issued a proclamation reaffirming the neutrality of that State.

General Corrells' Advance on Monterey—The Plan to Capture the City—Skirmishes Between the Forces of Cevallos and Treviso—Commerce Reviving.

General Treviso is concentrating his entire revolutionary force north of the Sierra Monterey, and is strengthening the fortifications of the city, where he intends making the last stand.

General Corrells is advancing from Saltillo with 5,000 government troops towards Monterey. The government forces hold the cities and States of Zacatecas, San Luis Potosi and the States of Coahuila, which would be open to commerce were the insurgents not in Monterey. They also hold a small portion of the State of Nuevo Leon.

General Cevallos, with 5,000 men, is driving the revolutionists from the frontier back to Monterey, where they will be between his and General Corrells' forces, which will be united to attack Monterey, and either capture Treviso, whose forces they likely outnumber, or compel him to abandon the place and take refuge in the mountains. Daily skirmishes occur between the advance guard of Cevallos' forces and Treviso's, always resulting in forcing Treviso's men back nearer Monterey.

Commerce is reviving with the prospect of the capture of Monterey, which will open the roads to the interior, already under the control of the government.

THE TREATY.

The British Minister and Secretary Fish in Consultation.

THE AMENDMENTS NOT ACCEPTED.

Her Majesty's Government Decline to Accede to the Senate Modifications Without Full Explanations.

PROBABLE FAILURE OF THE TREATY

A Postponement of the Geneva Tribunal the Only Hope.

WASHINGTON, June 1, 1872.

The British Minister was in consultation with Secretary Fish this afternoon until after six o'clock respecting the probable failure of the treaty in the event that the British government should decline to ratify the Senate Supplemental Treaty. It is understood that Earl Granville has informed General Schenck, who in turn communicated it to Secretary Fish this evening, that Her Majesty's government must decline to sign the proposed Senate article unless explanations are fully given as to the meaning of the amendments to the article proposed by the British government. As the matter is now entirely in the hands of the Senate, and as the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations are, with a single exception, opposed to any change whatever, England must take the responsibility of withdrawing from arbitration. Members of the Cabinet and leading administration Senators share in the hopes that the Treaty is a failure.

Great Britain is willing, however, to postpone the matter and defer arbitration, if the United States is willing to further discuss the subject. This is now under consideration. The President was at his room at the Capitol to-night signing bills. While he remained in his room he showed the latest despatch from Lord Granville to a number of Senators. This despatch contained nothing new, but is simply a reiteration of the old demand for explanation. The feeling now is that the British government desires to tide the matter over the present session of the Senate, and so be able to carry on further negotiations with the plastic vessel known as the Secretary of State, independently of the advisory capacity of the Senate.

The determination not to recede any further is still uppermost, but it is understood that a request for time for more careful consideration of the supplemental article has been made by the British government. This request, if it means anything, must mean a postponement of the Geneva Tribunal, which should meet on the 15th. Without such postponement the treaty would be a failure, in spite of all the consideration which either government can give it, and no opportunity would be afforded Mr. Fish to back down again, for it would fall by its own terms.

THE BRIGHT SUNSHINE YESTERDAY TEMPTED ON AN unusually large number of pleasure-seekers to the Park, and they doubtless found abundant means of enjoyment. The Mall, broad as it is, was crowded that it failed to serve the peripatetic needs of the people who thronged along it to the band stand, and the turf on either side—thrown open on Saturdays only for the convenience of the public—was dotted with beautiful women, in handsome dresses, attended by well-dressed cavaliers. The music was more than ordinarily good, and Dodworth's band rendered the following programme with singularly effective skill.

1. Central Park March. 2. Overture, "Festiva." 3. Waltz, "Village Swallow." 4. "Ave Maria." 5. March (popular airs). "When Over the Mead." 6. Reminiscences from the operas of Balfe. 7.
